Box Score Project

By Chuck McGill

t SABR51 in Chicago, we kicked off the box score project. This project will build on work that was initially done by some SABR members for The Chadwick Bureau, transcribing box scores for minor league seasons so that individual and team stats can be calculated. In addition, previously unidentified players will be identified, and other players who are currently listed separately will be found to be the same player.

If all goes to plan, we'll have a website where the processed data will be available. Individual game box scores will be constructed from the transcribed data, along with player game logs for individual seasons, team game logs, and league standings. The intention is for it to be a kind of Retrosheet for the minor leagues, albeit without playby-play for every game. Eventually, we intend to add play-by-play info for those games for which we can find it.

As part of the project, we're also collecting game logs that members have compiled, along with seasonal compilations, team rosters, play-by-play accounts, unpublished averages, and league schedules (most have already been collected).

A mailing list for the project has been created at https://sabrgroups.org/g/minorsboxscores. Any members are free to join the list, whether they participate in the project or not.

On the mailing list main page, you can find links to the data that has been collected so far. Also, you can find the presentation given at the convention, along with instructions on how to transcribe the box scores, and the template to use to do so. If anyone is interested in helping with the project, contact me at cmcgill.vt@gmail.com.

Our data manager is still working on the data flow for processing the box scores. Once everything is ironed out, the transcribed box scores should be able to be processed quickly. We hope to have something up before the end of the year.

Organization of Inter-State Association

n Autumn 1882, some baseball clubs in Pennsylvania started talking about forming a league. On October 30, this was formalized when Secretary Eli Fox of the Active club of Reading sent out a call to seven other clubs in Pennsylvania, Delaware, and New Jersey to attend a meeting for that purpose. Six teams sent representatives to Reading on November 9, and five of them officially organized the Inter-State Association on November 25. They were, besides the Actives, the Anthracite club of Pottsville, Pennsylvania, the Harrisburg (PA) club, the Merritt club of Camden, New Jersey, and the Quickstep club of Wilmington, Delaware. Mr. Fox was elected president of the league, with Thomas Fielders of the Anthracites as vice-president, and August Richter of the Merritts as secretary-treasurer. All five clubs were successful in applying for alliance status with the American Association (AA). This would protect the clubs from having their players signed by AA clubs although it meant they had to obey AA rules, including a ban on playing National League (NL) clubs. The NL was generally recognized as the best in the world, so their clubs were top attractions. Fortunately, this ban was later lifted when the AA signed a peace treaty with the NL and the newly-formed Northwestern League, known as the Tri-Partite Agreement. One umpire from each Inter-State city was selected, and the AA rule was adopted that visiting teams would receive a guarantee of $65 per championship game (even if stopped before becoming official) and 50% of receipts for exhibition games.

Organization of the Brooklyn Club

While this was going on, in Brooklyn, New York, George Taylor, a newspaper editor, began organizing a professional club, which Brooklyn, third-most populous city in the country, had been lacking for the past few years. His first step was in securing grounds, leasing land between Fourth and Fifth Avenues and Third and Fifth Streets, formerly the site of the Washington Skating Park and before that a Revolutionary War battle. When his initial investor backed out, Taylor's lawyer connected him with real estate man Charles Byrne, who in turn brought in his brother-in-law, Joseph Doyle. Construction of the ball field began during the winter, and when the work proved more expensive than expected, Doyle turned to Ferdinand Abell to join the ownership. Byrne, Doyle, and Abell would be the principal owners of the club until Byrne's death in 1898. Construction of the buildings and fences at what was to be known as Washington Park was begun in March, and work was completed in early May. Meanwhile the club was admitted to membership in the AA Alliance. It also, along with several other clubs, applied for a franchise in the Inter-State Association, but no action was taken on these applications until March, when Brooklyn, along with Trenton, was accepted, making an awkward seven-team league. Because Brooklyn was starting from scratch while the other clubs had established nines, they didn't start working out until April 17, while most of the other clubs were playing exhibition games before that.

League Schedule

With the league membership set, the Inter-State adopted a sixty-game schedule lasting from May 1 to September 29 (later extended to October 13), each team to play the others five times at home and five on the road. At Taylor's suggestion, teams played only one game at each city during road trips, so teams weren't away from home more than a week. They usually played three championship games a week. This left plenty of time for exhibition games to be played. The initial schedule lasted only about two weeks and was reworked several times. In early July, it was decided to expand the number of championship games to an additional sixty, most teams having played about 25 games then. But in mid-July, the Merritt club disbanded, citing a lack of support in Camden. This required yet another adjustment of the schedule, with teams playing two games at each city during road trips instead of just one. Most of the teams ended up playing around seventy championship games.

Standings

Brooklyn played 78 games against the other Inter-State clubs, winning 47, losing 30, with one tie, in addition to two forfeit wins. However, several of these were exhibition games and at this time, it is difficult if not impossible to determine exactly which ones those were. So apologies if any of the games described hereafter were in fact exhibitions. Apparently some of the games were not counted because an official league umpire was not present. (In mid-season, the league followed the example of the AA in hiring a regular staff of four umpires plus one alternate.) Every newspaper seemed to have its own standings, which didn't agree with anyone else's, even when they supposedly came from the league secretary. The Brooks' (as their fans called them) official record was 44-28, good for first place. When they played their final game on September 29 against second place Harrisburg, Brooklyn had a half-game lead so it was thought that the winner of that game (which turned out to be Brooklyn) would be the pennant winner. However, Harrisburg lost to Trenton on October 1, which would have put them behind Brooklyn in any case. It is not clear that they had to play that game, though, and might well have skipped it if in first place. Brooklyn was only able to win due to the dissolution of the Merrits, who had a record of 27-8 when they dropped out of the league. The Inter-State followed AA rules in counting the Merritt games but not awarding them the pennant, since the club no longer was part of the league. Brooklyn's record was close to .500 when the Merritts dropped out.

The Brooklyn team played a large number of exhibition games against a variety of competition. They faced off against the New York NL team twice, losing both times. There were ten games against AA clubs, in which they had a creditable 4-6 record. They also played seventeen games against other organized clubs, taking fifteen of them. These included independent professional clubs and college teams. One interesting competitor was the nine of the Staten Island Cricket Club, which included James Tyng, sometimes credited with inventing the catcher's mask, and "Cap" Cammeyer, whose father was the owner of the Union Grounds in Brooklyn, the first enclosed baseball field.

The Players

In early March, Brooklyn signed its first six players: pitchers Dennis Creeden and John Doyle, catchers Francis Murphy and John Farrow, shortstop Billy Geer, and first baseman-outfielder Oscar Walker. Creeden and Murphy had formed a battery on the Olympic Club of New York in 1882; they were released in late May without participating in any championship games. Geer had been Cincinnati's regular shortstop in 1878 Doyle had played for the Metropolitans in 1881 and 1882 as well as three games for the St. Louis AA club in 1882. He would pitch mainly in exhibition games, appearing in the box in perhaps only two championship games, but was used regularly in the outfield in the first part of the season. Farrow also had experience with the Mets as well as other professional teams. Walker had played regularly for St. Louis in 1882 and before that spent two seasons in the NL with Buffalo. To them were added in mid-March Bill Schenck, who was the regular third baseman of the Eclipse in the AA in 1882 and Tom Dolan, a catcher and outfielder with six years professional experience, including part of the 1882 season with Buffalo of the NL. They also signed local player William Dugan but dropped him in late April, at the same time declining to sign a young first baseman from the Alaska Club of New York they gave a trial to, Dave Orr. By early April they had put together a full roster of twelve players, including pitcher Jim Egan of the previous year's Troy team, second baseman Tim Manning, who had played for the Providence and Philadelphia clubs in 1882, and outfielder Harry Luff, who played in both major leagues in 1882. Luff, a college-trained engineer, was selected as team captain. However, due to an injured arm, he played sparingly before being released in early July. Geer replaced him as captain. Egan did most of the pitching in the first part of the season. However, although the Brooklyn management made a point of only recruiting players of good character, Egan proved an exception. He would be suspended for drunkenness on May 24. Doyle would have filled in for him but sprained his knee, so Brooklyn recruited John McCabe and then John Firth as replacements (as well as signing but not using Thomas Pollard) before relenting and reinstating Egan. Geer was apparently the only player to play in all of their championship games. Of course, the official league statistics were reportedly as unreliable as the standings, and the statistics on Baseball-Reference.com, compiled by Vern Luse from Sporting Life box scores, are less than perfect. By the time they started workouts, Bill Morgan, another catcher-outfielder, who had played some for the Alleghenv club the year before, was added. Yet, with all the catchers available, their opening day catcher was one Mellon, presumably William Mellon, who spent most of his career with Waterbury. Perhaps soon after that, they added Wash Williams, yet another catcheroutfielder. He would go on to a very brief major league career. Dave Oldfield caught a game on June 7; he would return to the Brooks in 1885 and 1886. In an exhibition game on June 20, three new players John Campana and appeared. Charles Tuttle would each have brief stints with the club, but pitcher William (Adonis) Terry would be in the starting rotation for Brooklyn through the 1891 season. They added two outfielders in the first half of July. Edgar Smith, who had played a couple of games for the Providence NL team earlier, played left field the rest of the season, while (Michael?) McManus of the Comets of Woonsocket, RI only played a few games. Dolan was released in early July for violating club rules, and at the end of the month Jim Egan followed after going AWOL, his drinking not having abated. Egan would sign with an independent club in Waterbury where he got into a fight and was knocked out before being expelled for, guess what, drunkenness, and in October found himself in jail on a robbery charge.

Then came the biggest event in Brooklyn's season, the expiration of the Merritt Club. As previously noted, they had by far the best record in the league at that time, and, 91 years before Catfish Hunter, their players were to learn the benefit of free agency. Representatives from several ball clubs descended on Camden to offer contracts to the Merritt players. Charles Byrne was not caught sleeping; as soon as rumors of the breakup of the Merritts started, > he spoke to that club's owner to put in a good word with his players, and then sent Taylor to Camden to negotiate. Taylor signed pitcher Sam Kimber, catcher Jack Corcoran, first baseman Charlie Householder (which allowed Walker to move to center field), lefty-throwing second baseman/right fielder Bill Greenwood, shortstop Frank Fennelly (who would play second and third for Brooklyn), and center fielder Bill Kienzle. But they didn't want Kienzle: they only signed him because Greenwood refused to join them unless they did. Brooklyn immediately dropped Kienzle, who then was grabbed by the Quicksteps. The other Merritt players were also in demand; Fred Warner signed with the Philadelphia NL club, while Bob Emslie, Gid Gardner, and Rooney Sweeney went with Baltimore of the AA. With the Merritts they were earning between $90 and $150 per month; Greenwood signed with Brooklyn for $350 per month, Fennelly got $280, and the others received from $175 to $250 monthly. This would set a pattern for Byrne and the After the 1884 season, Brooks. when the Cleveland NL club went bust, Brooklyn gobbled it up, acquiring such players as Bill Phillips, Germany Smith, George Pinkney, and John Harkins. At the end of the 1887 season, they bought the Metropolitans, gaining Dave Orr (finally desirable), Darby O'Brien, and Al Mays. They would also buy up star players from other clubs: Bob Caruthers and Dave Foutz from the St. Louis Brown Stockings, Hub Collins from Louisville, and Pop Corkhill from Cincinnati, leading to championships in 1889 and 1890.

With the new players on board, Manning, Morgan, Williams, and McManus were released. After this, the roster remained stable the rest of the season with the exception of a few one game fill-ins. Bill Schenck injured his arm on August 28 and was out the balance of the year. Fennelly moved from second to third, Greenwood from right to second, and Doyle mostly filled in in right field to replace him.

Season Highlights

The season kicked off for Brooklyn on May 1 when they played a game in Wilmington, a game originally scheduled for May 18. The Quicksteps took the game by a score of 9-6. Brooklyn beat them the next day, but that was almost certainly an exhibition game. Their first home game was on May 7, but Washington Park wasn't finished, so they played in Newark, New Jersey, on the grounds of the Domestic Club. They picked up their first league win, beating the Anthracites 5-2. After being rained out the next day, they learned that the grounds in Newark had been leased to Forepaugh's circus, so they had to play Harrisburg at Prospect Park in Brooklyn. That was an open field, so no admission could be charged. Harrisburg not only lost 7-1, but the first charges of hooliganism were leveled against them. Besides constantly haranguing the umpire, they were alleged to use violence or its threat to win. In a game in June, Harrisburg's pitcher John Schappert deliberately hit seven Quickstep batters (the rules didn't provide a penalty then). In another game, it was reported a batter threw his bat at Schappert in retaliation for throwing at him. Later in the season, when an umpire ruled Schappert had illegally thrown overhand, the crowd of 1500 fans threatened him, so he was too intimidated to call it thereafter. (But Brooklyn won that game, 14-7.) Harrisburg was managed by Henry Myers, who had managed the Baltimore AA club the year before. Their number two starting pitcher was Tom Burns, who would star for Brooklyn later in the decade as a right fielder.

After two games were postponed, Washington Park was finally ready on May 12. A crowd estimated at 5000-6000 paid 25 cents each to witness the opening. They were treated to a band concert before the game. At 4 o'clock, Brooklyn won the coin toss and chose to take the field in their blue and gray uniforms. After a bad first inning, they gave the fans their money's worth, winning 13-6. They played an exciting game against the AA Allegheny club on May 18, falling behind 6-0 in the second but rallying to win the game 13-8. The next day it was back to league play, and they suffered their worst loss of the season, a 16-1 humiliation by the Merritts. Although management had made sure the field at Washington Park had good drainage, they had to postpone games on May 22 and 23 when defective sewers on a neighboring street caused flooding and ruined the turf. On May 24, all the excitement was caused by the opening of the Brooklyn Bridge. The ball club played the Quicksteps in what was most likely an exhibition game; since it was a Thursday, women accompanied by men were admitted free.

On June 21, after being clobbered twice by the leagueleading Merritts, Brooklyn finally took one from them, 4-3, tying the game in the ninth inning and scoring the winning run in the eleventh when Terry led off with a double and crossed the plate on Manning's two-out single. They would lose twice more to the Merritts before that club disbanded. In the July 16 game, Egan scored four runs, but they weren't enough to keep the team from losing 7-6 in 11 innings against Harrisburg. On July 25, Brooklyn played its first game with the new players from the Merritts, and defeated the Quicksteps 2-1. The two sets of players combined to produce the runs in the sixth, newcomer Householder doubling in Walker and Geer. They then lost the following two games, but won ten of their next eleven. The July 30 game with the Anthracites was played in Camden, the two teams having seven former Merritt players between them. That drew an estimated 500-600 people. Certainly one of the most exciting games came on August 4 in Harrisburg. With Brooklyn trailing 1-0 with two outs in the bottom of the ninth, Geer reached base on an error, Farrow followed with a single, and Terry ripped a double to plate them both for the win. Then they and the umpire had to run for their lives as the fans hurled stones at them. On August 15, the St. Louis AA club failed to show up for a scheduled exhibition game in Brooklyn so the Brooks played a picked nine and offered their fans a refund or a rain check for another game. In a game on August 21, Frank Fennelly led the team to a 5-2 victory over the Anthracites by hitting two homers; he was the only member of the team to homer more than once for the season. Around this time, it became known that the Anthracites were having financial difficulties, as they said they would shift their home games to Atlantic City. They also scheduled some games in Philadelphia, but also returned to Pottsville. The receipts from the September 5 and 6 games in Pottsville were just enough to pay the guarantee to Brooklyn. They forfeited a game on September 19 when they failed to appear in Reading, the players refusing to go since they hadn't been paid in full since August. The following week against Brooklyn they forfeited two games as well as two in Wilmington.

On August 30, the Brooks with Terry in the box allowed just two Harrisburg baserunners, shutting them out 3-0. According to the league secretary, they led Harrisburg by 1.5 games as of September 23, then gained the two forfeit wins. On the 26th, they had to face the Actives, who besides the Merritts were the only team with a winning record against Brooklyn for the season. But with the pennant nearly at hand, they scored their biggest winning margin of the year, a 13-0 thrashing of the boys for Reading, who failed to get a single hit in a game called after 6.5 innings. Sam Kimber walked only one in the game, which was just a preview of a 10-inning no-hitter he took part in the following year. The next day, Brooklyn faced off against the Actives again, and the game was a scoreless tie through seven innings. The Actives scored three runs in the top of the eighth, but the game was called for darkness before the inning ended, so they didn't count. Meanwhile, Harrisburg lost to Trenton, 7-3, giving Brooklyn a 1.5 game lead (although Harrisburg had gone 2-1 since the 23rd, the lead then would have been 0.5). Harrisburg would have to beat Brooklyn in the two games in Brooklyn on September 28 and 29 to have a shot at the pennant.

Before an estimated 1200 fans, Harrisburg took the first game 8-5, Schappert pitching against Kimber. The next day, anywhere from 2000 to 4000 people showed up for the final showdown. Terry was in the box for Brooklyn and Burns hurled for Harrisburg. The Brooks scored 7 runs in the first three innings, and Farrow made a sharp play in the bottom of the first. With the bases loaded, he intentionally dropped the third strike on Schappert, touched home and threw to first for a double play. Schappert was fined by captain Myers for running, which created a force situation. Harrisburg fought back to make the score 7-6, but Brooklyn got three in the seventh and one more in the eighth before the game was called due to darkness at the end of the inning. In October Brooklyn played a couple of exhibition games, the second a benefit game for the players, and then the players went their separate ways.

Post Season

The Tri-Partite Agreement provided that teams in the Northwestern League and the American Alliance could reserve their players, preventing teams that were a party to the agreement from signing them to contracts for 1884. It also stated that teams couldn't sign players for 1884 before October 10. But on September 1, the American Association clubs decided to just ignore those provisions. Apparently the National League clubs went along with that, and both started signing players away from the Inter-State clubs. The Inter-State officially protested, but there was nothing the league could do to stop it. Byrne had displayed his usual foresight, however, and had already signed most of the Brooklyn players to 1884 contracts. Corcoran, Householder, Greenwood, Geer, Walker, Farrow, Terry, and Kimber would all appear with Brooklyn in 1884.

On November 23, with the Anthracites busted up, four of the five remaining clubs in the Inter-State Association met in Philadelphia; Brooklyn didn't send a representative. Clubs from Allentown, Altoona, and Lancaster, Pennsylvania were admitted to the league. Brooklyn applied for membership in the American Association and on December 12, they were admitted along with clubs from Indianapolis, Toledo, and Washington. While this was going on, a new eastern minor league called the Union League was being organized. During the winter, most of the Inter-State clubs switched to this new organization, which changed its name to the Eastern League, and the Inter-State, down to two teams, died a quiet death.

Ottawa Lynx team ownership history

by Steve Rennie

This article was published in the Team Ownership History Project

The story of the Ottawa Lynx baseball team begins in the late 1980s, when Ottawa Mayor Jim Durrell announced his plan to bring Triple-A baseball back to the city after a 34-year absence. He found a valuable ally in local entrepreneur Howard Darwin, who had previously been involved in bringing major junior hockey to Ottawa. Darwin recognized the city's potential as a sports hub and saw the enthusiastic support for baseball in Ottawa.<sup>1</sup> The proposal generated excitement and caught the attention of Minor League Baseball executives, including Harold Cooper, the president of the International League.

Cooper expressed his support for Ottawa at a luncheon during the 1988 winter meetings in Atlanta, where Ottawa's Triple -A bid was being promoted. However, he emphasized the need for a stadium, declaring, "They have to build one."<sup>2</sup> By all accounts, the trip to Atlanta was a success. with at least two Triple-A club owners showing serious interest in relocating their franchises to Ottawa.<sup>3</sup> Darwin's favorable impression on the owner of the Montreal Expos, Charles Bronfman, during a latenight encounter in the Montreal billionaire's Atlanta suite, further bolstered Ottawa's chances. Claude Brochu, the Expos' president and CEO, and longtime club executive Jim Fanning, who were also present that evening, set the stage for Darwin. "Brochu and Fanning had already talked to Bronfman, suggesting it was a good idea to get Ottawa onside," Darwin told the Ottawa Citizen. "The Expos were losing a lot of fans in the market to the (Toronto Blue Jays)."<sup>4</sup>

Back in Ottawa, discussions continued with Brochu regarding the possibility of Ottawa becoming the new home for the Expos' Triple-A affiliate. This opportunity arose as their agreement with the Indianapolis Indians was set to expire.<sup>5</sup> Baseball Canada also expressed interest in having a 10,000-seat stadium in Ottawa as the national training center for Canada's baseball teams.<sup>6</sup>

While excitement grew around Ottawa's pursuit of a Triple-A baseball team, the focus shifted to finding a suitable venue. The city identified two sites owned by the National Capital Commission (NCC), the government agency responsible for federal parks and public spaces in the Ottawa area, but both had drawbacks.<sup>7</sup> The Rideau River

Park site, previously used as a city dump, would require expensive remediation efforts; and the other site, in the eastern part of the city, lacked accessibility and nearby amenities.

Despite these challenges, Darwin believed that LeBreton Flats, a riverfront site just west of Parliament Hill, was the ideal location for a new ballpark.<sup>8</sup> The NCC initially resisted the idea, citing concerns about its impact on existing development plans.<sup>9</sup> Darwin's persistence, along with increasing public support and pressure from Mayor Durrell, eventually led to a reconsideration of LeBreton Flats.<sup>10</sup>

In March 1989, Darwin attempted to purchase the Oklahoma City 89ers, the Triple-A affiliate of the Texas Rangers, for $5 million Canadian (approximately $4 million USD), with the intention of relocating the team to Ottawa for the 1991 season.<sup>11</sup> However, the offer was turned down, prompting Darwin to continue his search for another team to buy.<sup>12</sup> "My approach is still to get the first team that comes available," Darwin said during a July 1989 visit to Columbus, Ohio, where he met with executives from Triple-A clubs.<sup>13</sup> He remained hopeful that Ottawa could become the farm club for an expansion team.<sup>14</sup> Bob Rich, the owner of the Triple-A Buffalo Bisons and leader of Buffalo's bid for a major-league expansion team, suggested the possibility of Ottawa as a potential location for a farm club.<sup>15</sup>

The stadium issue persisted and caused setbacks in Darwin's efforts. The city's stadium feasibility study faced delays, and when it was finally released, city staff recommended the Rideau River Park as the top choice, with a new location, known as Bayview Yards, as a possible alternative.<sup>16</sup> However, the city council voted against the stadium, leaving Darwin feeling that the deal he had secured to purchase a team had been sabotaged.<sup>17</sup> Disheartened, he threw in the tow-el. "It's done and I'm done – that's all there is to it," he said. "Now I just want to get on with life and forget it ever happened. Naturally, it was all a big waste of time."<sup>18</sup>

With Darwin no longer in the picture, others took up the mantle. Mayors of neighboring municipalities showed keen interest in the idea of bringing professional baseball back to the Ottawa area. Some politicians approached Darwin to see if they could rekindle his interest in a Triple-A franchise, but he chose to stay on the sidelines, bruised by his previous experiences and hesitant to dive back into the world of baseball.<sup>19</sup>

In the spring of 1990, a now-easily recognizable landmark for Ottawa baseball fans emerged as a highly promising candidate for hosting a Triple-A franchise. The 18acre property on Coventry Road, situated in the east-end next to the major Highway 417, was a regional snow dump owned by the federal government. A stadium deal began to look increasingly likely, with the city entering into talks with the federal government to buy the land.<sup>20</sup> Even Darwin was starting to get back in the fold, his interest piqued by the progress being made in the negotiations. He said he would rejoin the effort to bring a Triple-A team to Ottawa if the city came to him with a stadium deal.<sup>21</sup>

Darwin invited Randy Mobley, the commissioner of the Triple-A Alliance, to come to Ottawa on the eve of a crucial city council stadium vote to help bolster support for the cause.<sup>22</sup> After the city council backed plans for a stadium at the site, Darwin took Mobley to a celebratory lunch and a tour of the Coventry Road location.<sup>23</sup>

Darwin had previously pursued buying and relocating a team to Ottawa, but now shifted gears to focus on securing an expansion franchise. In an interview with the Ottawa Citizen, he stated his lack of interest in acquiring the Denver Zephyrs, the Triple-A affiliate of the Milwaukee Brewers.<sup>24</sup> Instead, he spent the summer meticulously preparing Ottawa's 70-plus-page official application for an expansion Triple-A franchise.

Corporate sponsors began to materialize, including Labatt's Breweries of Canada Ltd., which expressed an interest in getting involved with the prospective franchise in Canada's capital.<sup>25</sup> Momentum was building toward Ottawa's Triple-A bid. Demonstrating his enthusiasm, Darwin submitted his bid ahead of the 23 other competing groups.<sup>26</sup> He was surprised to find out that 19 other cities and groups – including him – had applied, each including a nonrefundable $5,000 (US) application fee. "I'm surprised. No, I'm shocked there's that many," Darwin said. "I figured there'd be no more than half that many."<sup>27</sup>

Darwin would have to wait until that November to find out if Ottawa's bid made the shortlist of expansion candidates.

It was a gamble that had consumed Darwin for nearly two years, draining his bank account of more than $100,000 (C) and testing his resolve as a sports entrepreneur. He had staked his reputation and fortune on bringing Triple-A baseball to Ottawa. But as he arrived at the Ramada Inn in the Chicago suburb of Rosemont, Illinois, he knew that his dream hinged on the next three days. There, in the hotel's corridors and boardrooms, he would face the final and toughest challenge of his bid: convincing Triple-A executives that Ottawa deserved a franchise.<sup>28</sup>

Darwin, Durrell, and the rest of the Ottawa contingent gave their all in Rosemont. Their impassioned pitch, lasting an hour, made a lasting impression on the Triple-A expansion committee. Larry Schmittou, the committee chair, expressed his admiration for the Ottawa bid. "The Ottawa bid was very impressive," he said. "I think if it relied upon the mayor to build a stadium, he'd be out there tomorrow with a shovel."<sup>29</sup>

Back in Ottawa, Darwin wasted no time and embarked on a campaign to secure $5 million (C) from private sources by April 1.<sup>30</sup> This would coincide with the visit of Triple-A executives to potential expansion cities. He also sought to sell up to 7,500 pledges priced at $25 (C) each, which offered the chance to secure season tickets for Ottawa's anticipated Triple-A club.<sup>31</sup> The response was immediate, with more than 2,000 pledges sold in the first three days, and all 20 private suites were quickly leased for a period of five years.<sup>32</sup>

The Triple-A expansion committee slowly reduced the number of teams in contention for a franchise. By early April, nine cities remained on the short list: Ottawa; Annapolis, Maryland; South Bend, Indiana; Memphis, Tennessee; Jacksonville, Florida; Quad Cities, Illinois/Iowa; Birmingham, Alabama; Charlotte, North Carolina; and Tulsa, Oklahoma.<sup>33</sup>

Ottawa's bid encountered a potential setback when city staff cautioned that widening roads and upgrading sewers for the stadium could potentially incur an additional cost of $3 million (C).<sup>34</sup> This revelation led to significant concerns among city politicians, with some expressing strong opposition to the increased financial burden.<sup>35</sup>

In a surprising turn of events, Darwin, who had recently dismissed the idea of pursuing the Toronto Blue Jays' Triple-A affiliate, the Syracuse Chiefs, suddenly changed his position.<sup>36</sup> He began contemplating the possibility of making a bid for the Omaha Royals of the American Association, deviating from his initial commitment to securing an expansion franchise. Mobley, the Triple-A Alliance commissioner, gave his blessing for Darwin to kick the tires on Omaha while simultaneously continuing to pursue Ottawa's expansion bid.<sup>37</sup>

The stage was set for Triple-A's expansion committee to visit Ottawa on May 31, 1991.38 Schmittou, the chair of the committee, along with other Triple-A officials, arrived in the capital city with a clear message: Ottawa had to demonstrate its ability to finance the $21.6 (C) million stadium.<sup>39</sup>

Eastern Beverages, a division of Pepsi-Cola Canada Ltd., extended a financial boost to Ottawa by becoming the official soft-drink sponsor for the stadium, contributing a substantial sponsorship amount of 800,000 (C).<sup>40</sup>

The Triple-A expansion committee named Ottawa as one of its final five expansion candidates, along with Bowie, Maryland (formerly Annapolis), Birmingham, Charlotte, and Tulsa.<sup>41</sup> Darwin worked to secure his financing. The city reached an agreement to sell a portion of the 20-acre Coventry Road site to the private sector, generating approximately $4 million (C) in revenue. Additionally, the sale of luxury boxes and in-park advertising brought in over $5 million (C). Meanwhile, Darwin had already pledged to repay $4 million (C) over a 15-year period. It was anticipated that scoreboard advertising and stadium naming rights would contribute an additional $2 million (C).

The Ontario government's $4 million (C) share stood as the last piece needed to initiate construction on a new stadium.<sup>42</sup> The clock was ticking. Triple A gave Ottawa until August 15 to confirm the stadium construction. However, a week before the deadline, the province surprised Ottawa by announcing that its $4 million (C) share would be a loan rather than a grant. This meant that the city would be responsible for repaying the money, which threatened to derail the bid.43 The Ontario government decided to cut its original contribution in half, putting city staff in a scramble to revise the stadium plan just hours before Triple A's deadline.44 Ottawa managed to meet the deadline by submitting a written commitment to build an $18 million (C) ballpark. However, the scaleddown stadium plans left Triple-A executives disappointed.<sup>45</sup> Ottawa's bid no longer seemed assured.

In a final attempt to keep its bid alive, Ottawa sent a delegation to the Marriott Rancho Las Palmas Resort in Rancho Mirage, California, where Triple-A executives were gathered for their fall meetings.<sup>46</sup> Darwin and others from Ottawa's contingent socialized with members of the expansion committee during a reception put on by the Triple-A Calgary Cannons, the hosts of the fall meetings. The only other bidders present at the event were from Birmingham.<sup>47</sup>

Despite all the setbacks and financial challenges over the previous three years, Darwin's relentless pursuit of a Triple-A franchise finally paid off. On September 28, 1991, the expansion committee granted franchises to Ottawa and Charlotte for the 1993 season.<sup>48</sup> An emotional Darwin reflected on the accomplishment. "It was emotion more than excitement," he told the Ottawa Citizen. "I said all along if somebody could convince me Triple-A baseball was bad for Ottawa, I'd step aside and call it quits. No one did."<sup>49</sup>

Having secured his Triple-A franchise, which would eventually play in the International League, Darwin now turned his attention to building his fledgling, yetunnamed team. The expenses associated with running the ballclub were becoming apparent, and they were considerable. As per the regulations, Major League Baseball required all minor-league clubs to contribute 5 percent of their gate revenues, with a minimum contribution of $1.5 million (US) in 1991. This amount would increase to 1.75 million (US) in 1993, when Ottawa was to begin play, and further rise to 2 million (C) in 1994. Darwin would also be responsible for covering the expenses of a 30-person traveling party.<sup>50</sup>

One of Darwin's first orders of business was naming the new ballclub. He chose the name Ottawa Lynx from a pool of 35,000 fan suggestions.<sup>51</sup> Next, Darwin hired 34-yearold Tom Maloney – fresh from being named The Sporting News' 1991 Minor-League Executive of the Year – as his general manager.<sup>52</sup> Darwin was drawn to Maloney's previous expertise in securing broadcasting deals during his time with the Denver Zephyrs. Maloney wasted no time in trying to put together a radio and television package for the Lynx. "Radio is essential to any ball club," he told the Ottawa Citizen. "We have to maximize all revenue streams and radio and television are certainly two big areas. They are also two great marketing tools."<sup>53</sup>

Maloney's hire doubled the size of Ottawa's front office – the only other employee at the time was Darwin's daughter, Nancy, who served as the club's interim director of operations.<sup>54</sup>

The ballclub wrote to the 6,000 fans who paid $25 (C) apiece to have priority access to season tickets for the Lynx's first season.<sup>55</sup> Season tickets to the 71 home games were priced between $298.20 and $596.40 (C), while single-game tickets were available from $4 to $8 (C).<sup>56</sup> The club opted to reserve 2,500 seats in the 10,000-seat ballpark to sell in groups or packages.

Construction started in June 1992, leaving a mere nine months until Opening Day.<sup>57</sup> Even before the first shovel was in the ground, the club had sold nearly 4,000 season tickets. Maloney had his sights set on selling 7,500.

In September 1992 the Lynx made another significant offfield move by becoming the Triple-A affiliate of the Montreal Expos.<sup>58</sup> Maloney secured a deal with local television station CHRO to broadcast 30 games throughout the Lynx' first season. Selling radio rights to Lynx games, however, proved more challenging.<sup>59</sup> The club eventually sold its French-language radio rights to CKCH-AM, which already broadcast Expos games.<sup>60</sup>

For their stadium dining experience, the club drew inspiration from the Blue Jays, who operated the Hard Rock Café and Windows restaurants at the SkyDome. These establishments welcomed patrons to dine by paying a small cover charge, without the need to purchase a game ticket. Emulating this successful model, the Lynx opened Tufts restaurant to the public. With a captivating view of the field, diners could enjoy food and drinks by paying a cover charge during ballgames.<sup>61</sup>

The Lynx experienced a vibrant atmosphere in their inaugural home game, on April 17, 1993, as they welcomed the Charlotte Knights, another expansion team, to what was then called the Multi-Purpose Recreational Facility.<sup>62</sup> The ballpark was packed with 10,332 enthusiastic fans, who watched Charlotte defeat the Lynx, 4-3. Throughout that season, the Lynx maintained a commendable average attendance of 9,772, and concluded the season with a respectable record of 73-69.

However, the following years witnessed a decline in the team's popularity. In 1994 the average attendance dropped to 8,929, and this downward trend persisted in 1995 – the year that Ottawa won its first and only league championship – when the team attracted an average of 6,888 per game.<sup>63</sup>

A few theories seek to explain the decline in attendance. Ottawa has traditionally been more of a hockey town than a baseball one. When the NHL Senators played in April and May, many fans opted to attend the hockey games instead of supporting the Lynx. This was especially true at the beginning of the Triple-A season in Ottawa, where the weather could be harsh and downright frigid.

The Ottawa Citizen offered another two possible reasons for the decline. "Fans didn't seem to understand that the Lynx were a feeder team, and that the parent club, the Montreal Expos, would always be stealing their best players. The homestands were too long, too."64 Some people argued that the Expos' limited spending resulted in lower-quality players in their farm club.<sup>65</sup>

By 1999 the Lynx's average attendance plummeted to a mere 2,789 fans per game, leading Darwin to look for potential buyers for the team. The diminishing attendance figures directly correlated with the team's on-field performance. Following their Governor's Cup victory in 1995, the Lynx never finished higher than fourth place from 1996 to 2000.

Later it was claimed that the club had been neglecting its sponsors, especially when attendance dropped and their investment didn't bring in as much exposure.<sup>66</sup> This left some members of the city's business community feeling unappreciated, causing them to question whether they should keep supporting the club.

The Pecor Era (2000-2006)

In the spring of 2000, Ray Pecor, a prosperous Vermont businessman, emerged as a promising candidate to purchase the team. Darwin said that Pecor, who built his fortune as the owner of a successful ferry company, first approached him in August 1999 to explore a potential sale. He claimed that Pecor, who also owned the Montreal Expos' Class A affiliate in Vermont, was "one of the nine people who have shown interest" in purchasing the Lynx. Darwin set the asking price for the ballclub at $10 million (C), according to the Ottawa Citizen.67

Pecor soon emerged as the front-runner to buy the team. Two major obstacles stood in the way of a sale. The first, which was relatively easy to overcome, involved getting the approval of the International League, minor-league baseball owners and the baseball commissioner's office. The second and more challenging one was to work out new financial arrangements with the city. Darwin said he had paid the city a half-million dollars in 1999 to use the ballpark – now called JetForm Park – and he and Pecor wanted to lower that to a base rent plus a share of the attendance revenue.<sup>68</sup>

The city council agreed to review the lease terms, and Darwin and Pecor reached a tentative deal. They agreed that Darwin would retain a 25 percent stake in the Lynx, while Pecor would acquire the rest. Pecor also pledged to keep the team in the city for at least five years, and to cover the outstanding $2.8 million (C) debt on the ballpark if he relocated the team before the lease expired in 2009. The city agreed to lower the rent to 108,000 (C) a season, along with taking a cut of the club's ticket sales.<sup>69</sup>

Pecor's purchase of the team was approved by the International League during a half-hour conference call on the morning of May 26, 2000. "I'm proud to have brought baseball to Ottawa, but it's time to move and get new blood," Darwin told the Ottawa Citizen. "I'm very pleased that the club is staying in Ottawa and I want it to be successful."<sup>70</sup>

On June 19, 2000, Pecor acquired majority ownership of the Lynx for approximately $7 million (US). This investment also granted Pecor the rights to operate and manage JetForm Park through a renegotiated lease agreement with the city. As part of the agreement, Darwin would maintain his 25 percent stake in the team until January 1, 2001. At the start of the new year, Darwin sold his remaining shares to Pecor for an undisclosed amount. The new owner wasted no time beefing up the team's marketing staff, adding two new salespeople, and setting his sights on Ottawa's business community as well as potential fans across the Ottawa River in the neighboring province of Quebec.71 Pecor also swiftly reduced parking fees from $5.50 to $2 (C).<sup>72</sup>

He and new general manager Kyle Bostwick also sought to put some distance between the new regime and the old one. They retired the team's popular mascot, Lenny the Lynx, changed the club's uniforms, and adopted an aggressive new logo.<sup>73</sup> "This season we will have an opportunity to put our stamp on the club," Pecor told the Ottawa Citizen in November 2000.<sup>74</sup> Changing the team's moniker wasn't on the table. "We didn't want to change the name because people like the name and it was chosen by the people of Ottawa," Bostwick told the Citizen. "But we wanted to get rid of any association with any bad experiences people might have had in the past. We want to start fresh."<sup>75</sup>

The new owner was not immediately embraced by Ottawa's business community. Bostwick lamented to the Citizen that his four-person sales team often couldn't get their phone calls returned. "We have to convince them we're not the same team," he said.<sup>76</sup>

The Lynx finished Pecor's first full season as the owner with a 68-76 record, their sixth consecutive losing campaign. They also averaged the lowest attendance in the 14 -team league, with 2,944 fans per game. Every other team drew at least 4,000 on average. Bostwick confirmed to the Citizen that the club lost money, but he did not disclose the amount. Some of those losses resulted from one -time spending to upgrade the ballpark's luxury boxes and buying new food-preparation equipment after the team took over concession sales. Bostwick also said the club increased its marketing budget to record levels.<sup>77</sup> Pecor later claimed he was losing $1 million (C) a year on the team.<sup>78</sup>

At the beginning of the 2002 season, Pecor issued a statement warning that relocation might be necessary if the team couldn't attract a minimum of 4,000 fans per game. Mobley, the president of the International League, expressed his disappointment regarding the Lynx's attendance. While Mobley acknowledged the efforts of Bostwick and his staff, he emphasized the need for improved attendance. "We need to start seeing some results, beginning with this month and on through the summer," he said. "If that doesn't happen, I'm sure Pecor and I will be sitting down to see where things are."<sup>79</sup> A few months later, Pecor offered a glimpse of the club's financial situation. "It's not going to be $300,000 or $400,000 (C)," he said of the team's projected losses. "It's going to be substantial."<sup>80</sup>

In August, Mobley traveled to Ottawa to meet with Pecor and Bostwick at the ballpark, with the team's attendance as the main focus of the agenda.<sup>81</sup> Mobley didn't mince words about the possibility of the team leaving Ottawa if the crowds didn't improve. "We've got a situation here where (Pecor) is losing millions of dollars," he said. "That's not a good situation for a man or for a league. There needs to be a reason to stay here, and right now that's not being demonstrated."<sup>82</sup>

With the specter of relocation hanging over the Lynx, the team severed its 10-year relationship with the Expos in September 2002 and signed a two-year agreement with the Baltimore Orioles.<sup>83</sup> That prompted speculation the Lynx would move after the 2003 season.<sup>84</sup> Mobley openly mused about relocation. "We're looking at better options," he said in June 2003. "I don't think we've seen anything different (from last year). We have to be realistic. I guess, if something miraculous happened, it could change, but I would say the clock is probably ticking. We're looking through different scenarios right now."<sup>85</sup>

Running the team was costing Pecor around $3 million (C) annually, and he estimated he was losing between $700,000 and $1 million (C) a year.<sup>86</sup> In order to make a profit, the Lynx needed to attract approximately 4,500 fans per game. Even though he was losing money, Pecor raised the team's marketing budget to $300,000 (C) for the 2004 season, aiming to draw an average of 5,000 fans per game.<sup>87</sup>

However, average attendance continued to hover around the 2,100 mark, nearly identical to the team's levels at the tail end of Darwin's ownership.<sup>88</sup> Pecor approached the city about changing the terms of the stadium lease to allow for other events.<sup>89</sup> He ruled out hosting concerts due to concerns about potential noise complaints, but suggested that a temporary dome in the winter could allow for events during the offseason. City officials speculated that Pecor had intentions of selling the Triple-A team and seeking an independent replacement for the stadium.<sup>90</sup> That left questions around what would happen if it lost its main tenant. The land surrounding the stadium was appraised at approximately $5.6 million (C) by the city, while the estimated cost to replace the stadium was set at $20 million (C).<sup>91</sup>

Meanwhile, rumors began circulating that the Orioles were considering purchasing the team and moving it to Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.<sup>92</sup> The city had caught Pecor's attention as a possible future home for the Lynx. Nevertheless, it seemed likely that the Lynx would return to Ottawa for the 2005 season.

However, during the summer of 2005, reports started surfacing indicating that US sports entrepreneurs Joseph Finley and Craig Stein, who between them owned three other minor-league ballclubs, had intentions to acquire the Lynx.<sup>93</sup> Their plan was to move the team to Allentown, Pennsylvania, with the relocation scheduled for the 2008 season.<sup>94</sup>

The credibility of these reports seemed to gain weight when, in early July, the Pennsylvania legislature voted in favor of financing the debt for a new stadium in Allentown, projected to cost approximately $34.3 million (US), through an increase to the state's hotel tax.<sup>95</sup> Pecor maintained that he wanted to keep the team in Ottawa, but he made it clear that relocation remained a possibility if attendance didn't improve.<sup>96</sup>

In December, Finley and Stein took a significant step by putting down a $750,000 (US) nonrefundable deposit through their company, Gracie Baseball, to secure a Triple-A ballclub.<sup>97</sup> They also agreed contribute $1.35 million (US) to a capital fund designated for significant repairs and miscellaneous expenses, to be paid over a span of 29 years. The state, which had already agreed to contribute $12 million (US) toward the $34 million (US) stadium, upped its share by an additional $5 million (US), bringing its commitment to the project to $17 million (US).<sup>98</sup> All signs seemed to be pointing to the Lynx moving south of the border.

Joseph Finley and Craig Stein (2006-2008)

In June 2006, news outlets in Pennsylvania reported that Stein and Finley had acquired the Lynx as part of a complex farm-club exchange between the Philadelphia Phillies and Baltimore Orioles.<sup>99</sup> The news coincided with city officials in Allentown giving their approval for the construction of a $34 million (US) ballpark, which was scheduled to be completed in time for the 2008 season.<sup>100</sup> Both the Lynx and the International League denied the reports of a sale.<sup>101</sup>

Throughout the 2006 season, the Lynx consistently struggled with the lowest attendance in the league.<sup>102</sup> Uncertainty loomed over the team's future as Pecor stated that the Lynx would continue playing in Ottawa for the 2007 season, but he offered no guarantees beyond that. Tensions heightened after a meeting between Pecor and Ottawa Mayor Bob Chiarelli on August 24, 2006, to discuss the parking situation at the stadium.<sup>103</sup> Pecor vehemently denied reports suggesting that he had informed the city about the Lynx's impending departure.

He sold the team four days later.<sup>104</sup>

Under the terms of the deal, Finley and Stein would become majority owners of the team, with Pecor retaining an undisclosed minority stake.<sup>105</sup> Although the move to Pennsylvania wasn't made official until nearly a year later, the ballclub would remain in Ottawa for the 2007 season before moving to the newly built 7,000-seat stadium in Allentown in 2008 to become the Lehigh Valley IronPigs. The team also signed a two-year deal to become the Phillies' farm club after the Orioles ended their affiliation with the Lynx in favor of the Norfolk Tides.<sup>106</sup>

The City of Ottawa and Pecor wasted no time engaging in legal and financial wrangling shortly after news of the sale broke. Chiarelli contended that Pecor still owed the city nearly $3 million (C) in assumed debt from the club's purchase from Darwin.<sup>107</sup> Pecor shot back, suing the city for $10.7 million (C), arguing that between 1998 and 2000, hundreds of parking spaces were sold and not replaced, leading to insufficient parking at the stadium and contributing to the team's poor attendance.<sup>108</sup> Pecor also asserted that he shouldn't have to pay a $200,000 (C) penalty for leaving Ottawa before his lease expired in 2009. The city counter-sued for $2.7 million (C).<sup>109</sup> Pecor later offered to drop the lawsuit if the city agreed to waive its claim.<sup>110</sup>

The 2007 season ended without any official notice to the city about the Lynx's plan to move to Allentown. This created a predicament for the Can-Am league (Canadian American Association of Professional Baseball), which had expressed an interest in fielding a team at the stadium once the Lynx relocated to Pennsylvania.<sup>111</sup> But the league needed to know if the stadium would be available for the 2008 season so it could announce its schedule at the end of October 2007. Can-Am Commissioner Miles Wolff met with city officials and Lynx GM Bostwick to discuss the league's proposal for a new team in Ottawa.<sup>112</sup> The Lynx offered stadium assets worth nearly $1 million (C) to the city if it dropped the lawsuit. Otherwise, the team planned to sell off the assets themselves. Neither side budged. The city set a deadline for the Lynx to provide written notice of their departure by October 5, or else it would be assumed that the team intended to play in Ottawa for the 2008 season. That deadline came and went without a response from the Lynx.<sup>113</sup>

The city agreed to let the Can-Am league take over the Lynx's remaining two lease seasons, allowing the team to move to Allentown and rebrand as the IronPigs.<sup>114</sup> While this arrangement removed any penalties for Pecor's early departure of the Lynx before the lease ended, the city still expected him to repay the outstanding $3 million (C) debt.

Ottawa's Can-Am franchise, the Rapidz, had a short-lived existence, playing only one season. They finished last in the standings and accumulated a debt of $1.4 million (C) owed to about 150 creditors.<sup>115</sup> The club claimed that the city wanted to increase its yearly rent tenfold, from $108,000 to $1.1 million (C), once the Lynx's original lease expired at the end of the 2009 season. Wolff was hopeful that Can-Am baseball could come back to Ottawa in 2009. He noted that the Rapidz generated approximately $1.5 million (C) in revenue during their sole season.<sup>116</sup>

The city and Pecor settled their lawsuit in 2011, with the former Lynx owner agreeing to pay $1.95 million (C).<sup>117</sup> However, the legal dispute stemming from the Lynx situation continued with another team. The owners of the Rapidz filed a $3 million (C) lawsuit against both the city and the Can-Am League. The Rapidz took their case all the way to the Supreme Court of Canada, which upheld the lower court's decision to dismiss the lawsuit.<sup>118</sup>

The departure of the Lynx marked the end of an era for baseball in Ottawa. However, the city's love for the sport endured. Following the void left by the Lynx, Ottawa welcomed a succession of new teams, including the latest addition of a Frontier League team, the Titans, representing the fourth franchise to call the capital home since the Lynx's departure. Meanwhile, under the ownership of Finley and Stein, the Lehigh Valley IronPigs continue to flourish, ensuring that Ottawa's baseball legacy remains alive and well.

Ottawa's commitment to the game goes beyond memories of the Lynx. The city's collective passion and unwavering support fuel the sport's growth. Whether reminiscing about the historic era or celebrating the current achievements of the Frontier League team, Ottawa's love for baseball continues to resonate throughout the community. This commitment ensures that the sights and sounds of baseball will continue to be enjoyed by fans throughout the city for years to come, creating lasting memories and uniting them in their shared passion for the game.

Independent league contributions to Major League team rosters in 2023

by Robert Schulz

total of sixty players with connections to the Independent Leagues dotted the rosters of Major League teams in 2023. The breakdown of players includes six outfielders, four infielders and one catcher. Pitchers being the largest group at 49.

A further breakdown has seven players making their MLB debut. Three of these players started their pro career in Independent Leagues. Another seven players returned to the Majors after spending time in the Independent Leagues and 46 players from previous years continuing their MLB careers.

As of the start of 2023 the American Association, Atlantic, Frontier and Pioneer leagues have been designated as MLB Partner leagues. What does this mean? Possibly an increase in the number of former Independent League players on MLB rosters in the future.

Rookies	Position	Team	Independent season + team	League
Tristan Gray	infield	Tampa Bay	2020 Sugar Land Skeeters	Constellation Energy

Some interesting new Minor League Managers in 2023

by Robert Schulz

There were five rookie Minor League Managers in 2023 that never played professionally:

Liam Carroll with Salem Red Sox of the Carolina League. He was born in England and at age 41 made his North American debut after a career of playing and coaching in his home country.

Craig Conklin with Lansing Lugnuts of the Midwest League.

Ronnie Gajownik with Hillsboro Hops of the Northwest League. She joins Rachel Balkovec as the second woman to Manage in the Minors. Balkovec managed Tampa of the Florida State League in both 2022 and 2023.

Jeff Knackstedt with San Jose Giants of the California League.

Frank Maldonado with the Tampa Bay entry in the Florida Complex league.

Former Minor league players

Greg Brodzinski manager for Jersey Shore of the South Atlantic League was the Bullpen catcher/coach for the Philadelphia Phillies from 2020-21.

Jacob Heyward manager for San Francisco Giants Arizona Complex League is the brother of MLB player Jason Heyward.

Nick Lovullo manager for Chicago Cubs Arizona Complex League is the son of former MLB player Torey Lovullo.

A Tale of Two Koch Brothers

by John Iachetta

ay Koch was always daring. He would give fans "the heebie-jeebies trying to turn singles into doubles", and was apt to field balls hit to 2nd base "while turning a flip-flop or while sliding on his ear." And no one was Joe Gordon's regular double-play partner longer than him - Gordon was never paired so close or so long with Phil Rizzuto or Frankie Crosetti.

Ray Koch & Joe Gordon first played together in high school and Junior American Legion ball in Portland. They were inseparable as amateurs - the only time they were not on the same team was in 1933, when as college freshmen Gordon played for the University of Oregon and Koch played for Western Oregon University. Koch transferred to the University of Oregon in 1934, and for two years they were "Oregon's greatest collegiate infield combination in history." Oregon won the Northwest Conference both years. In 1935 Gordon (.415) was named All-Conference shortstop and Koch (.319) was All-Conference second baseman. Gordon was All-Conference shortstop in 1934, but as I am unable to find the list I don't know whether Koch was also All-Conference. As Koch led Oregon with a .370 average, he probably was.

In the summer they played in the Oregon State League for Ray Brooks' West Side Babes in 1932, the Salem Senators in 1933, the Eugene Townies in 1934, and the Hop Golds in 1935.

As of August 22, 1934, Gordon was hitting .420 for the Townies and Koch was hitting .405.

By 1935, major league scouts thronged the stands to watch them, and before the end of the year Koch & Gordon had both left college and signed with the New York Yankees. Their coach at the University of Oregon, Howard Hobson, unsuccessfully tried to convince them to finish school first, but they were too intent on their major league dreams to heed him.

They left college and signed with the Yankees together, but their paths diverged from there. In 1936 Gordon was sent to Oakland of the Pacific Coast League, where he hit .300. By 1938 he was the starting second baseman for the New York Yankees, and was on his way to the Hall of Fame.

By 1938, Ray Koch was "working in Portland". In 1936 he had been sent to class-C Joplin, and hit .261 without power. He also hurt his knee. He never played in pro ball again.

He continued to play in the Oregon State League and in 1941 he was joined on the Eugene Athletics by his younger brother, Barney Koch.

Barney Koch was just eighteen years old in 1941 when he joined Ray with Eugene. Barney had begun in the State League in 1940 with the Portland Babes, managed by Ray Brooks, the same team and the same manager that Ray Koch and Joe Gordon had begun with eight years earlier.

In 1942, as a college freshman, Barney became varsity second baseman of the University of Oregon, and by 1943 he had become the top amateur second baseman in Oregon. He spent that summer playing with the champion Portland Firemen of the Portland City League. The age of the average Fireman was a mere 18 years and two months, but they were utterly dominant. Up to July 27 they had won 11 games and lost one, scoring 142 runs and allowing 13. Barney Koch hit .583, with 35 hits in 60 atbats. The only pitcher to beat the Firemen was a major league veteran, Sergeant Jack Knott of the Camp Adair Timber Wolves, who defeated them 4-0, July 16, in the final round of the Oregon semi-pro tournament. Koch was named the best infielder of the state tournament.

The champion soldier Timber Wolves were unable to travel to Wichita, Kansas for the national semi-pro tournament, so the Firemen represented Oregon in their place. Despite their vouth and competition from teams with players such as Pete Reiser and Travis, Cecil the Firemen finished 7th nationally.

After the tournament Ray Brooks, "Mr. Oregon Semi-Pro Baseball himself" and manager of the Firemen, had eight of his players in the Dodgers try-out camp. The Dodgers signed one of them: Barney Koch.

In 1943, second base for the Brooklyn Dodgers had been manned by Hall of Famer Billy Herman, who hit .330 with 100 runs batted in and 193 hits. In 1945, Eddie Stanky would play second base for the Dodgers, scoring 128 runs on the strength of 148 walks.

1944 was a second-base Brooklyn trolley wreck. 10 different players spent time at 2nd, none starting more than 58 games there. The fill-in with the fourth-most starts at 2nd (26) was Barney Koch.

Koch had started the 1944 season with the International League Montreal Royals but was called up to Brooklyn in late July. In his debut on July 23, the first game of a double-header against the Pittsburgh Pirates, Barney batted lead-off and hit three singles. That would remain his major league career high in hits forever.

Just 21, Barnev finished the 1944 with season a .219 average in 33 games for the Dodgers, and .252 average with 48 runs in scored 82 games for Montreal. He hit 11 doubles, 2 triples, and o home runs. His most notable quality was probably his weight: weighing but 140 pounds, he was the lightest major leaguer of the 1940s.

BARNEY KOCH League Batting Champion

In 1945, Koch declined to sign his Dodgers contract in order to attend college through summer.

Like his brother Ray, Barney Koch had left the University of Oregon to play pro baseball. Unlike Ray, he left the pros on his own terms: he quit the Dodgers and finished college.

But he didn't stop playing baseball. He spent 1945 playing with the Giustina Reds of the Cascade League. In 16 games he batted a sweet .313 with 20 hits, 13 runs scored, and 9 stolen bases. Surprisingly, given his customary lack of power, he also led the league in home runs, with 4.

He had a spectacular semi-pro career in Oregon which lasted until 1953. He led the Cascade League in batting in 1948, with a .416 mark. In 1949 he played with Roseburg of the Southwestern Oregon League and was named the team's MVP, hitting .389. In 1951 he was a member of the state champion Coos Bay - North Bend club.

Barney became the baseball and basketball coach of the high school Grant Generals, and was with them from 1950 to 1960. His teams won 5 Portland Inter-Scholastic League titles and two state titles (1951, 1958). He was inducted into the Portland Interscholastic League Hall of Fame in 2005.

Ray Koch became a golfer, and was the club manager of Inglewood Golf & Country Club of Seattle for a number of years.
